Commented [KS1]: This is in the waiver app, not in ARM. The issue here could be that child care services by their nature provide services that are the responsibility of parents – it's about care as well as education and development, especially for infants and toddlers. Perhaps the better way to address limitations is to require parents be qualified ECE providers to be paid for providing child care services (which maybe doesn't work – are providers more like classroom aids, or babysitters?), and/or have continuity of care principles built in to support children's learning and development.
